Description

The first part of this walk (to the second viewpoint) is the easy access walk: it has a tarmac surface and seats along the way. The rest of the walk (beyond the second viewpoint) is on natural surfaces, with some ruts and steep gradients.

There are magnificent views over St Brides Bay: to the North the rugged coastline to Ricketts Head, the St Davids peninsula and Ramsey Island, and to the South towards Skomer Island. On clear days you can also see the island of Grassholm in the West; the gannets nesting on the island cover it in guano, giving it the white colour in summer.

As you return along the surfaced path, you can see impressive vertical cliffs of black shale topped by a thick layer of sandstone.

Directions

Leave car park on path towards the sea. Follow path around first viewpoint onto the Coast Path. A little way beyond the third seat there is a 1:15 gradient for 10 metres. For second viewpoint follow surfaced path to right. Retrace steps if only doing the easy access walk.

For Adventure walk, walk back from second viewpoint for a few metres and get back onto the Coast Path by taking the path on the right. Follow it downhill (1:12 to 1:6 gradient for 20 metres), then up (1:8 gradient for 6 metres).

After going through a gate and before reaching the next seat, there are two steep downhill sections (up to 1:8 for 8 metres, then 1:8 to 1:6 for 13 metres), followed by a short uphill section (1:8 for 6 metres). The seat is set back inland from the path.

After the seat there is a steep downhill section towards the sea (1:8 to 1:6 for 32 metres), followed by a slightly gentler downhill slope (1:9 to 1:6 for 25 metres). The path then rises again with two steep sections (1:9 for 5 metres and 1:9 to 1:7 for 54 metres) to a gate.

After the gate the path goes gently downhill. The walk finishes at a large white rock, giving good views of the Iron Age fort. Retrace steps.
